Can you not give us quality videos in HD so that our kids can download your shows on the PC, then watch in the high resolution? For me it is more of a personal choice - I just don't want to put a restriction on people downloading their TV series or movies. In the case of South Park I prefer to keep the files at least for a couple of years after they are aired on television, so people can download them at a later time and keep them forever, rather than downloading them all at once. Thanks for clarifying this issue. I see what you are saying. I also understand that it is a personal choice. My issue is a rule. That said, there are many cases of the TV show being legally owned by another company. If people want to download the content to their own device for any reason I have no issue with that. There are plenty of other ways to access content. I guess the question is more of, should there be a rule that people can't download the content? My rule is that if someone downloads content illegally, they have to give the source of it a chance to speak. If they don't give it a chance, then I don't want to give them a chance for their own reasons. The reason that the TV content has become available to the public in digital form is not the government. It is businesses who are providing the service. They are taking the risk of breaking the law. The reason that content is available to the public is because someone was willing to take the risk. They had to make a business decision and they made it. That was the market. The other side is the content owner. They decide when and how the content is made available. For some content the business model was to get the content on devices at a discount. Some content has a much higher upfront cost to get the content put on the devices. The content owner decides when and how the content is made available. The business decision was made. There is a risk that people will steal content. The content owner made a business decision and took the risk. The business model is changing with technologies like the iPad. The content owners have different business models for those. The content owners make a business decision to sell the content in digital form, the market decides how they are paid for that. The law has nothing to do with this issue. If I don't like the business model, then the market will decide if I will go with that business model 82157476af
