The effects of two different doses of ketamine hydrochloride on patients with SAD were evaluated in a double-blind crossover design, using a higher dosage in one phase and a lower dosage in the other. Eighteen males with SAD participated in the study. Tolerance developed in the course of the second phase. The subjective and objective measures of sedation were comparable in the two phases, although the higher dose of ketamine produced significantly greater subjective sedation. Ketamine, when administered intravenously in therapeutically appropriate doses, is effective in the treatment of SAD.Q: how to get iphone app iphone icon for push notification With the new iOS version devices have multiple icons (see screenshot below).
